

Pittsburgh is sad, but they will keep the Cardinals out of the cellar. Matt Garza will be good for the Cubs, but not good enough, and I just don't like Milwaukee. Greinke won't come back from the injury as soon as they think.

NL WEST: San Francisco, Colorado, Los Angeles, Arizona, San Diego; Too bad for San Diego they couldn't keep their run going. I love the Giants, Barry Bonds will be found not guilty, and I don't care what anyone says about it. Brandon Belt could win Rookie of the Year for the Giants, I love him!! I don't have strong feelings about the middle of this division. I love Juan Uribe, but he won't save the Dodgers, Kevin Towers moves over to run the Diamondbacks, but there still is nothing there, and Colorado will be plagued by injuries again.

PLAYOFFS: Philadelphia beats Cincinnati, Atlanta beats San Francisco; Philadelphia STILL goes to the World Series, where....

WORLD SERIES: The Red Sox mow down the Phillies and the Philly fans cry. One of Cliff Lee or Roy Halladay wins the NL Cy Young, but neither of them beats the Red Sox.

If the Giants repeat, I'll tear my hair out, I couldn't pick the two to play each other.... I'll print any comments from anyone else next time. This time, last minute here, I just got a set of comments from Rick:

Rick Desper (Sun, 27 Mar 2011 17:49:44 -0700 (PDT))

AL East: Red Sox. Depends a lot on the starting pitching. Which was disappointing last year.

Central: Tigers. Pitching?

West: Angels. Sort of a default pick.

Wildcard: Yankees. If they need somebody, they'll get him in mid-season.

NL East: Phillies. Duh.

Central: Cardinals. Pujols.

West: Giants. Defending champs.

Wildcard: Braves. A more reliable choice than the Rockies. Reds also possible.

ALCS: Sox over Tigers; NLCS: Phillies over Giants; WS: Phillies over Sox; I know it's boring to pick the Phillies and their overstocked rotation. They probably won't win. But they're still the best team to pick.

Rick

